FIRE IN NEW YORK.

Furniture Factory of J. W. Hamburger Destroyed.

National Associated Press to the Star. NEW YORK, Oct. 6 .- The furniture manulactory of Joseph W. Hamburger, a large five-story brick building, occupying Nos. 96, 98, 100 and 102 Attorneys street, caught fire at an early hour this morning and was burned to the ground.

The flames were first discovered by people living in the tenement houses in the rear of the building, and seemed to have originated in the third story of No. 102, over the main office. The flames spread with great rapidity, and soon alled the building from top to pottem.

Dense volumes of smoke burst from the front windows and drove back the firemen who sought to throw water into the interior of the burning building. One of the ladders on which some of the firemen were climbing to the third story took fire, and the men barely escaped from instant death by falling.

Two of the firemen were badly burned about the face and hands. The attempt to scale the front of the burning building was abandoned and the firemen climbed to too of the neighboring houses.

SALT-WATSH FISH IN A QUEER PLACE. It is not our purpose to go into a web of theories to substantiate the assertion made in the caption of this article, but simply for the present to record the fact that from a well of water recently dug on Sherman street there was yesterday raised to the surface in a single bucket-ful of water six diminutive fish of the tom-cod variety, which can now be seen at the store of Star & Bullock.

The tom-cod is nowhere found except The tom-cod is nowhere found except in salt-water, and is, as far as we know, a native of the Pacific Ocean, and its appearance here through such a source confirms the belief in the underground river and ocean theory.
